 Federal, state and private financial aid, for which the Fellow qualifies, as well as some nominal family contribution, can be applied toward the nominating institution's contribution of one-half of the study abroad program cost.

Institutional Support for Junior Year Study Abroad (JYSA)

The requirement that an applicant's college/university president (or another authorized administrator) nominate that applicant by signing the application serves two purposes: 1) it indicates the institution's commitment to providing academic advising to the applicant during the fellowship experience; and 2) it commits the institution to assisting in the payment of the unmet half of the applicant's study abroad costs.

While the first purpose set forth above is self explanatory, the second needs further explanation. IIPP is limited, legislatively, to paying not more than half of any fellow's costs for study abroad. The unmet half is made up of some combination of federal aid for which a student might qualify, institutional aid from the student's college or university, and some reasonable family contribution (not to exceed what a student would normally contribute to study at the home institution).

If the home institution is unwilling to provide support to a nominee that truly has need, it must indicate this by crossing out the language pertaining to support of study abroad and by attaching a brief explanation. In such a case, the applicant should be advised of his/her home institution's unwillingness to fully support the application in order to allow the applicant the opportunity to commit personally to covering the unmet cost. Please note the absence of a commitment from either the institution or the student may count against the applicant in the selection process.
